EXTRA INNINGS

EDITOR IN CHIEF BILL KUCHMAN

An asterisk Dictionary.com defines "asterisk" as "a small starlike symbol (*), used in writing and printing as a reference mark or to indicate omission, doubtful matter, etc."

Yes, this is another Barry Bonds column. This one is different though - this will be the last time I bring up Bonds in a column ... I swear to you ... I promise.

The past week saw several big moments in Bonds history.

■ Bonds played his last game as a member of the San Francisco Giants - and possibly altogether. Giants ownership has decided to build a younger team, and Barry just doesn't fit those plans. The Giants will probably take a hit at the gates because of this. Despite the (cough) alleged (cough) activities that Bonds engaged in, the Sultan of Syringe was still a fan favorite.

I don't know if Bonds assumes that another team is going to sign him for the 2008 season. It always seemed to me like the Giants were just sticking with him until he broke Hank Aaron's career homerun mark. Whether or not Bonds broke that record fairly, he was still a way to sell tickets. And if you believe that baseball is a business, that's the aim of the game.

I really can't believe another team is going to want to jump on the Bonds wagon for next year though. He carries so much baggage - a possible steroid investigation, the fact that he's a cancer in the clubhouse - it would negate anything positive he brought to a team playing-wise.

A lot of people have talked about how Bonds will sign with a west-coast American League team in order to take advantage of the designated hitter. Apparently the (cough) alleged (cough) steroids haven't given Barry the superpowers needed to play the field and bat all in the same game. Damn that flaxseed oil - you really should get the extra strength.

I really don't see one of the teams in the AL West jumping to sign Bonds though. Oakland's moneyball strategy doesn't fit Bonds. The Angels are too smart to pay for a washed-up Bonds. Seattle probably doesn't have the money to pay Bonds. And Texas ... well, OK ... maybe Texas would pay for someone like Bonds.

They did give Alex Rodriguez the game's biggest contract ever and also gave Bonds' powered-up peer Sammy Sosa a second shot at the big leagues.

■ Marc Ecko - the winner of the infamous 756 ball - announced the results of the poll that would decide the fate of the 756 ball. Voters had the choice to either send the ball to the Hall of Fame, brand it with an asterisk and then send it to the Hall of Fame or just send the cursed thing into space.

I voted to brand the ball. And so did the rest of the nation. The ball that broke Aaron's record will be going to the Hall of Fame ... with an asterisk.

Now, I could see the value of sending the ball into space - basically sending Bonds (symbolically) as far away from here as possible. To have the ball in the Hall of Fame though - and they did say they would accept the ball but that acceptance would not be a confirmation that they agree Bonds cheated - will allow the 756 ball to stand as a monument to the Steroid Era.

Memorabilia from Mark McGwire and Sosa are already in the Hall the 756 ball (with asterisk) sends a completely different message. The asterisk says that this needs to be questioned. Not that it's right or wrong. It needs to be questioned.

So there you have it - the final Extra Innings that will ever talk about Barry Bonds.

Ever*.
